One way we enforce this is through our Hidden Labour Exploitation Policy. The Major Group prides itself on trading ethically within the market; the following group policies shape the companies practices in ensuring ethical business:

- Anti-Bribery Policy
- Equal Opportunities, Trust, Dignity & Respect Policy

Our board of Directors ensure all company policies are upheld by every member of staff and comply with our ethical and legal obligations. These company policies are available from the S Drive.

The Major Group conduct strict right to work checks to ensure all candidates are compliant and eligible to work. This includes ensuring onsite identity documents match the candidate, video calling, onsite worker check-ins. All employees must evidence that they matched the original. Our CRM system operates a Compliance Screening module, which prevents workers with non-compliant records being booked onto an assignment.

Our Central Services Team run monthly checks to ascertain duplicate bank accounts and proof of address checks to flag up any 'patterns' which may indicate Gangmaster activity.

Where potential activity is highlighted, the Senior Management Team must be notified and provided the report. The SMT will instruct the People & Culture Team to carry out an investigation, including worker interviews and confidential surveys. Where necessary an interpreter must be arranged to support.

In the event Gangmaster activity is identified we will collaborate with the Gangmasters and Labour Abuse Authority (GLAA) to collectively find a solution and share our knowledge.

Branches have access to support systems, such as our dedicated Group Compliance Manager who conducts regular and thorough audits and our People & Culture team who run regular courses on the Stronger Together principles.

All employees are issued an Employee Handbook which outlines company procedures and processes in tackling Modern Slavery; this is revised and reissued annually.

Training

Employees are taken through training to ensure they are aware of Modern Slavery and Hidden Labour Exploitation, their responsibilities within their role and steps to take to prevent the practices. The need for thorough recruitment practices is highlighted throughout training sessions, including compliance training, as many of these are ways in which to protect their candidates. Employees are also made aware of steps to take should they have any suspicions, which includes an escalation process to People & Culture and/or Senior Management and, where the temporary worker has been working for one of the Group's clients, discussions with the HR Team or relevant contact on that site.

Contact numbers for relevant support mechanisms (e.g. Modern Slavery Helpline, GLAA and the Police) are available within the training materials, as well as on posters in our branches which are visible to candidates and clients who may visit that site, as well as acting as an ongoing reminder and engagement tool for employees.

The Major Group run compliance training for employees on a regular basis to ensure awareness and inspection in day to day practice. Regular sessions allow for our trainers to pass on new legislation and internal policy changes
